Why do societies create monuments? And why do they change and remove them? How do monuments shape historical narratives, embody cultural values, and become sites of mourning and protest? This course investigates the political and cultural work of monuments across time and space, from ancient Egypt to European empires to the contemporary United States. The issues we consider include memory and memorialization, race and representation, and appropriation and iconoclasm.